Safety is New Project of Canadian Junior Red Cross

The promotion of safety for young people at home and at play is a new project of the Canadian Junior Red Cross.

The plan for the current school year is based on a classroom calendar now being distributed to schools throughout Canada. This colourful calendar outlines the various factors of safety for youth. It is accompanied by a teacher's guide for instructional purposes. The calendar was designed on the advice of leading safety officials in co-operation with educational authorities.

A miniature of the calendar is also being made available to school children at cost. These are intended for the youngsters' rooms in their homes and include a guide for parents to supplement the instructions given by teachers in the classrooms.

The project was announced today by Dr. John T. Phair, national chairman of the Canadian Junior Red Cross. He said that safety authorities are alarmed by the increasing number of accidents among children in the home and at play.

"It is the hope of the Canadian Junior Red Cross that this project will make our youth more conscious of safety," he added. "The teachers of Canada have promised their full co-operation and their effort will give a new interpretation of the rules of safety to children in their care. This, supplemented by the interest of parents, will play a major role in the reduction of accidents of all kinds among our children."

Religious Revival Spreads In U.S.

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — A Roman Catholic priest and a Jewish scholar agreed last week that the 'religious revival" in the United States is little more than a "surface phenomenon."

The Rev. Francis X. Curran, professor of history at Loyola Seminary at Shrub Oak, N.Y., said at a symposium "a religion more respected, more discussed and more popular than it has been for a fenération.

"But there is little indication that the revival of religion has had any important effect upon membership in the Catholic church," he added.

Dr. Will Herberg, professor of Judiac studies and social philosophy at Drew University, Madison, N.J., said the typical American has developed a remarkable capacity "for being serious about religion without taking religion seriously."

OIL REFINERY engineers and chemists use everything from teapots to trained microbes to help them combat air and water pollution. Here Marilyn Dougherty pours while Imperial Oil senior chemist Bob Fern tastes tea made from river water. The tea magnifies the taste of any unpleasant elements in the water, help the chemists to identify and eliminate them. Imperial Oil is spending about a million dollars a year to combat pollution around its refineries.

TEA, BUBBLES, BUGS USED TO FIND CULPRITS WATER, AIR

A new breed of engineers is beating the pollution problem, according to an article in the October issue of the Imperial Oil Review'

Because air and water pollution became a major problem only recently (in the post-war years of industrial concentration), refinery engineers have had to pioneer many of their anti-pollution methods.

In an attempt to discover exactly which chemicals were adding to the pollution of the St. Clair River at Sarnia, for example, one Imperial Oil chemist made tea with the river water because, he discovered, tea magnified the unpleasant tasting elements in the water.

Over the period of a year he was gradually able to identify the chemical culprits by taste and chemical analysis. With this information he was able to set about removing them from the refinery effluent.

To solve the problem of removing phenol from refinery wastes, engineers began experimenting with tiny, phenol-eating microbes. The tiny organisms were originally found in stream beds where their oxidation activity kept the water pure.

Imperial chemists, through a series of patient steps, trained some of the microbes to consume phenol in a specially built refinery unit. The result: Imperial's biological oxidation program—or "bug plant" — in which 800 pounds of phenol are destroyed daily.

The use of "micro-balloons"—tiny plastic bubbles which are injected into storage tanks by the millions—was also pioneered in Canada by Imperial.

Over the past nine years, the Review goes on to say, Imperial has spent nearly $1,000,000 a year in anti-pollution measures and expects that this cost will be about a million and a quarter dollars a year from now on.

Canadian Investments Interest Europeans

CALGARY (BUP) — The president of the National Trust Company says that western Europe and more particularly, Switzerland, West Germany and The Netherlands is showing intense interest in Canada as a field for investment.

J. C. Hungerford, who is on a tour of western Canada, said in Calgary, "Everywhere I went in Europe during my recent visit I heard the same remark from investors with respect to this country." It was 'where else can we go?'—These investors realized that Canada had a stable government—a good labor supply—and great, undeveloped resources, Hungerford explained, hence their confidence in Canada.

The National Trust president said on the recent stock market decline that Canadians have become accustomed to a continuous boom —but they must realize there are bound to be setbacks. There is nothing to be alarmed about.

Flu Passes Peak

EDMONTON (BUP) — Alberta government health officials report the worst of the flu epidemic appears to be over.

Dr. A. Somerville, deputy health minister, says that incidence of the disease appears to be declining in areas which were hit early this month, while other districts are reporting outbreaks.

On a province-wide basis the epidemic has probably passed its peak, he observed.

Meanwhile in Edmonton some rearranging of patrol areas by city police has been necessitated by the absence of about 20 officers—ill with the flu.

DISTRICT AGRICULTURIST NOTES

By J. S. LORE

Farm management is playing a bigger part in successful farm operations every year. It does not appear to me that the price structures are going to change very much at least in the next few years, therefore, a farmer must try to make the most at income from the resources he has available. Every farm manager has several alternatives available to him and the decision he makes and diligence with which he carries them out will determine whether he is successful or not.

A farm today is no longer a self sufficient unit as it was 40 years ago. Today farms are mechanized and must buy many of their needs e g. gasoline, seed treatments, and fertilizer. Farms who try to be self sufficient find that they cannot compete with those mechanized and must buy many of their needs e.g. gasoline, seed treatments, and fertilizer. Farms who try to be self sufficient find that they cannot compete with those mechanized farms and they must go out of the business. With mechanization and finding yourself in the position of having to buy a large number of your needs calls for sound business management and a close look at what your needs really are.

First of all take a look at the whole picture of the farm. Is every enterprise on your farm an economic unit? If you have an enterprise on your farm that is not paying its own way, you should do one of two things. Either enlarge it to where it does pay or disband it and devote that capital and your management and labor to some other enterprise. Studies that have been conducted show that income is limited when there is more than two livestock enterprises in addition to the crop enterprise. More than two livestock enterprises compete too much for labor and management. Select livestock enterprises that go together for example, beef and hogs, dairy and hogs or poultry. Beef and dairy and sheep compete for pasture, hay and your time at the same times, so, don't go well together. The livestock enterprise should be large enough to fit the farm and your labor forces.

The crop enterprise perhaps calls for the most study as this is the enterprise that has the most investment in machinery. First, the crop enterprise should be large enough to warrant the investment into machinery. Second, if the enterprise is large enough to warrant the investment, then buy machinery that is large enough to adequately take care of the land, but don't go to the added expense of buying very large machinery that is too expensive for your size of farm. Of course, every farmer likes to have the largest tractor or combine but too often that means that he is depriving his family of a better living had that extra money been wisely spent. The same applies to trading in on a new machine. Before buying a new machine or tractor be sure that the new unit will make you enough extra money to warrant the expense. When you need a new machine or tractor be sure that the new unit will make you enough extra money to warrant the expense. When you need a new machine go and buy it don't be sold, but before buying consider the possibility of having the job custom done or hiring a machine. Another way of cutting investment is having two or three farmers using one machine that is used only occasionally every year.

Since it is true that a farmer today has to buy many things that our forefathers didn't, it is also true that he must watch very closely where he spends that money. It also holds true that today farmers must keep records to see where the leaks in his own economy are, and so that he will be able to manage a better business tomorrow.

Since I am leaving the government services Oct. 31, this will be the last article that I will be putting in the Lac la Biche Herald. I would like to take this opportunity to thank all the farmers for their co-operation with me during the past four and a half years. I hope you will show my successor the same friendliness that you have shown me.

Calgary M.L.A. Says Social Crediters "On the Way Out"

By ERNEST MARDON

EDMONTON (BUP) — Ernest Watkins, MLA-elect for Calgary, is confident the Alberta Conservative party will be in a position to present to the citizens of the province an alternative to the Social Credit government after the next election.

Watkins, who won the Oct. 2 by-election by a large majority (he increased the Tory vote in Calgary by 17 per cent), told a news conference the Social Credit party is one without a past or a future

It was born to a set of conditions in the depression years of the 1930's, he explained. (But Alberta of today is a different place from the Alberta of 1935, when the Social Credit came to power).

Watkins spoke to a group of University students Tuesday noon hour. He also addressed a large gathering of Conservative supporters at the Corona hotel in the evening. Many of his listeners were from out-of-town, some coming from as far as Islay and Jasper.

The 55-year-old Calgary lawyer declared western Canada had produced two great leaders in the past 40 years—R. B. Bennett, Calgary lawyer and prime minister, and John Diefenbaker, Saskatchewan lawyer and prime minister.

Referring to the Social Credit party, he said, it can only govern by retreat, by isolation and by diversion. He stressed the present administration lacked leadership in developing the province's great natural resources and secondary industries.

He declared the $20 oil royalty dividend was a clumsy way of wasting the wealth of the province and not in the best interests of all Albertans of this and future generations.

ERNEST WATKINS
Calgary M.L.A.

Summing up, the new MLA said, "The spirit of conservatism is all that is alive and vigorous in our nation today. We can, like Diefenbaker, find fulfillment by sharing others' interests, and by doing so, foster our own."

Dr. A. H. Sweet of Islay said, amid loud applause, that Watkins was the man he would like to see as next premier of Alberta.

Independence is something that the married man brags about.

Medical Check-Up To Cost More

CALGARY (BUP) — A new schedule of medical fee will go into effect across Alberta on Jan. 1.

Dr. W. Bramley-Moore, registrar of the college of physicians—says that the council of the college has approved the new schedule to be used by members as a guide in assessing charges for services rendered. The complete revision—first since 1948—will see upward adjustments in most fields. Major increases relate to home and office visit.

Dr. Bramley-Moore explains that the new schedule tends to bring fees in line with what is already charged in both Edmonton and Calgary. A medical check-up will cost seven dollars, compared with the previous rate of five dollars.
